Mobilization of Credit Urged by Roberts in London Fallacy to Suppose Wealth of U. S. Had Been Largely Increased During the War, Chamber is Told

LONDON, June 29 (By The Associated Press).—Discussing export credits before the financial group of the International Chamber of Commerce to-night, George E. Roberts, vice-president of the National City Bank of New York, said the United States and other countries, was suffering from demoralization of trade and industry.

General mobilization of credit, he declared, was needed to take goods from the producer for cash and sell wherever needed for credit. It was a fallacy to suppose the wealth of the United States had largely been increased during the war, Mr. Roberts asserted, for the United States was growing wealthier before the war, and the movement had been checked, rather than stimulated, during the conflict.

Dealing with the proposal to cancel the Allied debts due the United States, Mr. Roberts said action by the American Congress was necessary, which was unlikely in a matter so important without a definite expression of approval from the people. There were a number of influential supporters of the proposal in the United States, Mr. Roberts declared, but at present, he added, it must be said that the great body of the American public was not convinced either that justice to America's late associates required cancellation or that the emergency confronting the debtor countries was so great as to require cancellation in order that they should regain a sound economic position.

Americans, however, Mr. Roberts said, did not desire to pursue a harsh attitude regarding loans, realizing that American prosperity and foreign markets for American products were dependent on international trade.

Sir Drummond Fraser, organizer of the financial section of the League of Nations, expounded the amended Ter-Moulen credit scheme as put before the various countries. The root of the idea is a scheme to provide essentially to impoverished countries by long-term credits and the creation of what is described as a reservoir of credit. P. O. Watts, of St. Louis, said the American group was fully prepared to endorse the scheme, which, it was of the opinion, was well devised to meet trade conditions in some countries.

After some criticism a resolution was carried supporting the scheme and the following resolutions were adopted: 1. That the American group be authorized to continue its work in connection with the League of Nations.

2. That the American group be authorized to continue its work in connection with the League of Nations.

3. That the American group be authorized to continue its work in connection with the League of Nations.
